OPTION A: ITALY ADOPTS NEW LAW TO REDUCE FOOD WASTE KEY

- 1 Food waste is an issue that has begun to gain attention all over the world. Besides perpetuating hunger and food
- 2 shortage, food waste is a huge contributor to global climate change, as it releases the equivalent to some 3.3 billion
- 3 tons of CO2 each year.
- 4 Italy, known for its amazing food, is doing something about it. To combat food waste, the Italian government
- 5 recently passed a new law aimed at making it easier for both sellers and consumers to prevent food waste. The new
- 6 law will relax regulations that have kept some restaurants, farmers and retailers from donating their leftover or unsold
- 7 food. Specifically, it will clarify that food can still be donated even if it has passed its sell-by date, and will allow
- 8 farmers to donate unsold food to charities without having to pay extra.
- 9 The law also contemplates creating cultural changes in the way Italians think about food – such as making it
- 10 easier to request “family bags” (sometimes known as the “doggy bag”) to take home unfinished food ordered at
- 11 restaurants, something that most Italians currently do not do.
- 12 Massimo Bottura, who was named the best chef in the world in 2016, is one of Italy’s most important activists on
- 13 the matter. During the Milan Expo, he opened an experimental soup kitchen with a Catholic charity that used food
- 14 that had been left over from the exhibition as part of a campaign to raise awareness about food waste.
- 15 Many hope the law will not only reduce food waste by 1 million tons each year but also benefit the 6 million
- 16 Italians living in poverty who rely on donations to survive.
