TEXT 1: THE HERMITAGE CATS

- 1 It is well documented that St Petersburg's Hermitage Museum in Russia is home to some of the world's greatest artistic
2 treasures; but less well known is that an army of cats has been guarding those treasures since 1745. In that year, Empress
3 Elizaveta Petrovna signed a decree ordering that cats were to be brought to her court —“the best cats, the largest ones, able to 4 catch mice, and accompanied by a person who will look after their health.”
5 Since then, there has always been a substantial number of museum cats. There were some 'catless' years during the Second
6 World War, but they were reintroduced soon after its end: museum legend has it that a special train travelled nationwide to recruit
7 suitable felines for service.
8 Nowadays, the cats which live in the Hermitage Museum number around 50 and are considered to be museum employees.
9 Actually, each animal has a 'passport' with its photograph! New arrivals are vaccinated and most are castrated to prevent
10 disproportionate proliferation. The felines also have their own washing machine, and those that leave the museum to be rehomed
11 receive a special Hermitage certificate, which gives them a certain distinction.
12 There are even three women who have full-time jobs looking after the cats, and they know all their names. “Cats are a part of 13 our life,” says one. “They amuse people and create a nice atmosphere for us.”
14 Last year, a French philanthropist left part of his inheritance to the cats. Yes, specifically the cats, not the museum. Apparently,
15 the Frenchman was so taken with the cute animals that he left a “small sum” to them after his death, CNN reported.

TEXT 2: WOULD YOU LIKE TO LIVE FOR 1,000 YEARS?

- 1 Centuries ago, Spanish explorer Ponce de León spent his life searching for the Fountain of Youth, which was believed to 2 restore youth to whoever drank from or bathed in it. Today, some scientists are keeping the dream alive. They are convinced that
3 genetic engineering, or the discovery of anti-ageing drugs, could extend human life far beyond its natural course. Indeed, Australian
4 geneticists believe such a pill could be as close as 10 years away, and other researchers think there is no reason why humans
5 cannot live for at least 1,000 years.
- 6 Those who want to live as long as possible would welcome this kind of research. But many philosophers and ethicists are 7 sceptical about the implications of longer lives, both for the individual and society.
- 8 Leon Kass, a bioethicist, wonders if life would be as serious or meaningful without a mortality limit. He believes that an end
9 point encourages us to make the most of our time, to live it passionately and struggle to achieve our goals in the short time we 10 have.
- 11 Philosopher Temkin expresses another worry. Our ability to remember is probably limited. As we age, we tend to forget many 12 things that happened time ago in our lives. Perhaps people who live for 1,000 years will forget altogether what they did in the 13 earlier parts of their existence.
- 14 Other critics fear that life-prolonging treatments may not be available to everyone. The rich will be able to afford them while the 15 poor won't. But let's say most of us could extend our lives. If we all continued to have children, the world would be even more 16 overpopulated than today, and job opportunities for younger generations would be reduced.
